Chris Roemer/Doug Benton

With a star-studded event at St. Mary's-Stockton this weekend, we take a look back at the Rams' non-league win over Salesian featuring prospects from the 2013, 2014 and 2015 classes. Also see which colleges took in the Bishop O'Dowd-St. Mary's Berkeley matchup.

St. Mary's-Stockton held off Salesian 64-56 this past Saturday. NCP Analyst Chris Roemer shared his thoughts on some of the top players, including a fast rising sophomore guard.

Unique Coleman is a versatile piece in the St. Mary's offense

Unique Coleman 5-foot-10 W St. Mary's-Stockton (2013): The 5-foot-10 wing has progressed nicely since her freshman year. She's now a versatile piece in the Rams' offense. She plays down around the basket, shoots from outside, and attacks off the dribble. Coleman was effective in the first half asserting herself in the offensive play. She was leading the way at the half and then disappeared as she received fewer touches and seemed to lose confidence. With her style of play, she needs to sustain an active level of play and move well without the basketball to remain a factor.

Zoe Correal 6-foot-4 Post Salesian (2014): The big post has taken steps to becoming a better player and having more of an effect on the game. Offensively against St Mary's, she was moving in and around space where she could be effective and produce easier opportunities. She presented a high target and decent touch. At the other end of the floor, she served as a deterrent placing her big body in the way of penetration and at other times using reach to alter shots. However, she still struggles to transition or shift laterally to get herself in good physical position.

Mariya Moore 5-foot-11 W Salesian (2014): Moore's game is predicated with her having the ball in her hands and the ability to make decisions. Against St. Mary's, she was a little casual with the ball early on and as the game grew closer to an end, she became a consummate leader and team player. She was much more patient and dropped the ball right into the hands of teammates for great scoring chances to score. She also used her size to drop the ball over the top of the defense. At times though, she was almost too unselfish to a fault. She needs to find a balance of scoring and setting up teammates because she can get her shot in easier ways than some of her teammates.

Deja Stallworth 6-foot-0 F Salesian (2014): The active insider has become quite the complimentary player alongside Mariya's star attention. She ran the floor hard and found herself in right spots at the right times to get the ball in her hands. When she received the ball around the basket, she finished with a high percentage. She was aggressive defending, rebounding and establishing herself as a factor in the paint.

Bre Moore 5-foot-6 G St. Mary's-Stockton (2015): Moore is a developing playmaker from the wing. She's confident to pull the trigger from the perimeter or use her handle to get into the lane. She plays physical and explosive at both ends of the floor. Despite struggling from the perimeter throughout the Salesian game, she had success falling back on her ability to put the ball on the floor. She'd line her defender up, initiate a shake from a body move and blow into the paint with a strong right move. She competes for the whole game.
