Scouting Aisia Robertson

Robertson is a tough slasher that can finish at multiple spots inside

The second part of the Dragons' junior duo, Aisia Robertson has emerged this year after being a complimentary player in her first two years. The 5-star guard has helped propel Bishop O'Dowd to No. 2 in the NCP Top 20.

Robertson, a 5-foot-7 guard, is being recruited from numerous West Coast schools and some out of area programs. Reported schools are UNLV, USC, Pacific, St. Mary's, San Francisco, Pepperdine, Oregon, San Diego State, San Diego, Washington State, Kansas, Texas Tech, Louisville and SMU.

Strengths: Robertson is a very good athlete at her best in the open court. She is a good jumper and forces the ball at defenders in transition. She is a tough slasher that can finish at multiple spots inside. Her handle is solid and she is a creative playmaker.

She makes her biggest impact on defense, where she uses her length to pressure on the ball and is dangerous picking off passes and getting quick offense. She has similar skills to a defensive back in football. She routinely has good totals in steals, blocks and deflections.

Weaknesses: Jump shooting and decision making are the biggest question marks for Roberson. With the junior being solid going to the basket, she will have to keep defenses honest with a consistent jumper to round out her scoring arsenal. Robertson can limit her turnovers to become a more efficient player.

Final Analysis: It doesn't take long to see the physical tools of Robertson. She is an off guard who can slide to point guard at times. She is one of three 5-star prospects in the 2015 class. Robertson should continue to draw interest from a variety of schools as the high school season winds down and the club circuit starts.
