Two years of high school basketball. Two state titles. Not a bad start for Bishop O'Dowd guard Aisia Robertson, who is playing with the CA Ballaz this summer. We caught up with the talented 2015 prospect to talk recruiting and improvements in her game.

The 5-foot-7 guard has wide ranging interest with schools like Cal, USC, Washington, Kansas, San Diego State, Loyola Marymount and UNLV in the early mix.

"So far, I believe I've contributed to my team very well. Personally, I believe I can play better," Robertson said of her play on the circuit. "Be smarter with the decisions I made."

Robertson is a very good athlete who can work some off the dribble and is a tough matchup in transition. She came off the bench this past season for Bishop O'Dowd, but should be in line for a breakout type season as a junior.

leadership from taking in that criticism."

"My game has matured," Robertson said. "I take criticism much better than I did as an incoming freshman and it's easier for me to show my leadership from taking in that criticism."

The No. 3 ranked player in the 2015 class has plenty of big game experience for an underclassman as she transitions into a leadership role.

"It definitely gave me a big lead over some of the players that didn't get to play in those games because I got to see the different competition and the level of other players," Robertson said. "It made me want to work harder and value practice much more because I know where I can get to and I know what the bigger goal is."
