Berkeley has won two straight NorCal Division I titles with a host of college bound athletes going through the program. One player who remained in the shadows is senior Garysha Youngblood, but the No. 19 ranked prospect has decided to play college basketball in the Bay Area next year.

Youngblood will travel a short distance to college

Despite ending her career without a state title, Youngblood leaves Berkeley with fond memories.

"My senior year was great for me. We went through the journey and went so far," Youngblood said. "Leaving this team is like leaving family."

The 5-foot-7 guard is headed to Holy Names in Oakland after also looking at Northern Arizona, Oregon State and Dartmouth. Rated as the second two-star in the 2012 class, she decided roughly two weeks after the state title game.

"It's close to home," Youngblood said of choosing Holy Names. "I'm a Bay Area girl and I wanted to stay local. My mom can come and see my games. That was the most important thing."

Youngblood said Holy Names plans to most likely use her as a shooting guard and likes the fact the Hawks play a similar up tempo system and filling the lanes to what Berkeley runs. Holy Names went 13-18 last year.

NCP analyst Chris Roemer said of Youngblood, "Youngblood may be going to Holy Names, but she has the athleticism, ability and potential to sneak onto a Division I roster. At Holy Names, she will bring them a player who will get after the ball on defense, produce in fast break situations and never take a play off."
